SIU budget amendment unresolved

By Matt Coulter
Daily Egyptian Staff Writer

An Illinois House-Senate conference committee will decide the fate of two amendments which added $1.8 million to the 1976-77 SIU budget.

The house voted to add the amendments to the Senate version of the SIU budget Thursday and brought the total to $104.4 million. The Senate had passed a bill giving SIU $102.6 million.

The difference in the two figures must be resolved by the conference committee before the bill can be forwarded to Gov. Daniel Walker.

Walker could use his veto powers to eliminate the amendments even if the House-Senate committee leaves them attached to the bill.

Walker trimmed $5.4 million from the 1975-76 SIU budget.

Bruce Richmond, D-Murphysboro, sponsored an amendment which added $1.128 million in General Revenue Funds for SIU. The SIU-S will receive $791,000 if the amendment remains unchanged.

"This money will allow us to meet our bonded debt, contractual obligations and to meet our operating costs," said George Mace, vice-president for university relations.

The University has bonded debt obligations on the Student Center and University Housing.

Mace said the Illinois Board of Higher Education had recommended that SIU use $1.128 million from University income funds made up of tuition money to meet operating costs rather than bond obligations.

Richmond's amendment would provide money to avoid dipping into the income fund to meet general operating costs, Mace explained.

The second amendment, sponsored by Leroy Van Duyn of Joliet, would give the SIU Medical School $750,000 to expand operations.

Mace said these funds would allow the Medical School to increase enrollment from 160 to 189 and would provide for expansion of the med-prep program.

Airport improvements would allow jet landings

By Robert Cook
Daily Egyptian Staff Writer

Southern Illinois Airport's capital improvement award of nearly $1.5 million Wednesday to resurface its two runways will result in heavier aircraft landing here, Robert Mackey, a staff assistant at the Southern Illinois Airport said.

Seventy-five percent of the money must still be approved by Congress and President Ford, Mackey said.

The $1.5 million award announced Wednesday by the state Department of Transportation is part of the fiscal 1977 $103.3 million state airport improvement and development program.

The program is 75 per cent federally funded with the state and local governments supplying an additional 12.5 per cent each. The federal funding approval is expected next week, Melvin Rosenbloom, director of the state division of aeronautics, said.

In Carbondale the federal funds will cover $1.11 million for the needed work with the state and airport authority each paying $164,000.

Mackey said the additional eight to nine inches of new asphalt atop the existing runway will increase airport capacity and safety. DC-9 and Boeing 727 type aircraft with full fuel and passenger capacity will then be able to fully operate out of the airport.

This has not been the case in the past, Mackey said. Large aircraft like the Boeing 727 could not take off or land with full passenger or fuel aboard.

Mackey said, "The Southern Illinois Airport has been a hub for commerce, education, working hand and hand with SIU for 27 years now. This improvement will continue to make us a leader in aviation for the Midwest states."

Rosenbloom praised the staff at the airport Wednesday for taking responsibility for establishing long term planning.

Some of the money will be used to install new lighting along the northeast-southwest runway to replace outdated equipment. An additional 55 acres of land adjacent to the airport will also be purchased.

Chain-letter scheme legal, attorney says

By Dan Hofmann
Daily Egyptian Staff Writer

A Southern Illinois attorney has prepared a memorandum backing up his position that a pyramid-style investment plan, which has been called illegal by Attorney General William Scott, is indeed legal.

J. Lewis Wingate, an attorney from Anna, said Thursday he finds nothing in the plan which violates either state or federal statutes. He prepared the memorandum for a group of Southern Illinois residents who believe the plan is legal.

The backers call the plan "The Spirit of 76 Invest in America Plan." Scott had labeled it, "Bicentennial Bunco."

The investment plan asks the purchaser to pay $37.50 for a packet containing an $18.75 U.S. Savings Bond, instructions and a list of 10 names. The purchaser mails the bond to the person in whose name it was issued, makes a list of new names, leaves off the name in the first position, moves all the other names up a notch, and adds his own name to the list.

The purchaser then buys two $18.75 bonds in the name of the person who is first on the list and makes up two packages to be sold to acquaintances.

"I can't see that the public has been defrauded," Wingate said. "The investment plan makes no promise to anyone that anybody can get a return."

Wingate said he doubted the case would ever go to court because, as far as he knew, no one had filed a complaint with the attorney general. The assistant attorney general's office in Carbondale has not received a complaint.

Wingate wouldn't reveal the specifics of the memorandum. He wants it given to Vic Sabittini, 28, Makanda, a member of a group of approximately 125 area residents who have drawn together in the belief that the plan is legal.

Sabittini said he would make the memorandum available to the press soon.

Although Wingate's interpretation of the laws involved differ from Scott's, he said his memorandum is not meant to challenge the attorney general. "It's certainly not meant to intimidate the attorney general or any law enforcement officials."

Sabittini said the investment plan has been hurt by adverse publicity. He said the media picked up on Scott's declaration that the plan was illegal and that people would lose money on the scheme.

"I can give you the names of 30 people who have received 30 to 90 bonds. In the Southern Illinois area it does work. If it doesn't work, how come banks were running out of bonds?" Sabittini asked.

An officer at the Bank of Carbondale said Thursday the bank had run out of U.S. Savings Bonds three weeks ago and only regular customers were allowed to buy bonds then. "Even some regular customers may not have been able to get bonds. We were out of them because the Federal Reserve Bank was out of them."

Melvin Lipe, an officer at the Carbondale National Bank, said he'd received a letter from the U.S. Treasury asking the bank not to sell bonds to people if the bank thought the bonds might have been used in a chain-letter. "We won't sell them, ($18.75 series E bonds) if we suspect or know it is in relation to chain letters. We've had several requests that we have turned down," said Lipe.

Lipe said a purchaser could be suspect if he wanted to buy a bond in the name of someone far away or for someone they weren't related to. He said most people purchase bonds for themselves or a relative.

Because the attorney general said the plan was illegal, many area people have been unable to sell their bonds for several weeks, said Sabittini. He said, however, that bonds were still being received by some.

"It's not broken yet, but we're flying pretty low," said Sabittini. He said people are continuing to invest in the plan because Wingate has said the plan is legal and because the attorney general has indicated he has no plans to prosecute.

Originally, the attorney general's office released an educational statement saying the plan could be dangerous to the investor. Later, the attorney general

Coalition discusses success in coal mine land reclaiming

By Tom Chesser
Daily Egyptian Staff Writer

The latest meeting of the Strip Mining Reclamation Coalition was devoted to discussion of their recent success in persuading coal companies to leave strip mined land in arable condition.

The coalition represents interests from 12 Southern Illinois counties involved in strip mining. Representation includes county board officials, regional planners, soil and water conservationists, tax assessors and the concerned public.

At a meeting Wednesday night, members discussed the outcome of the public hearings held between representatives of the coalition and southwest and Amax coal companies in Perry County and between Consolidated and Peabody coal companies in Randolph County. The hearings were successful in that the coal companies agreed to leave land that was farmable prior to mining in the same condition afterwards, said member John Pierce.

Susan Casey, coalition vice-chairman, attributed the coalition's success to the cooperation of the Illinois Department of Mines and Minerals and a new Illinois statute.

"The law requires that all coal companies wishing to engage in strip mining apply for a permit. Within the requirements of this application the company must include its plan to reclaim and redevelop the land they mine. This plan is sent to Springfield for review and to the county where the permit is applied for."

With the new law the county has the right to request a hearing and meet with the coal companies to contest their plan if they find it insufficient. In that case the Department of Mines and Minerals may deny their right to mine, said Casey.

Casey said that up until the time the law was passed the coal companies were satisfied with leaving the land stripped or plowing it into pasture land. "We are pushing for them to make it able to grow row crops on," she said.

The new law has provided the coalition with a greater voice in land reclamation matters, said Casey, and has prompted the group to meet monthly rather than quarterly as it has done since its organization a year ago. The necessity for monthly meetings has also resulted in demands from members for a more formalized organization.

Suspected assassins arrested

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP)—Palestinian and leftist guerrillas promised Thursday to report on the interrogation of the suspected assassins of U.S. Ambassador Francis E. Meloy Jr., an American aide and their Lebanese driver.

President Ford met with top aides in Washington on whether to send in U.S. troops to evacuate Americans. "If American military forces are used, it will be a very short operation," Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger told Congress.

The guerrillas announced the arrest of a number of suspects during the day and hinted that they were Arabs but did not give their nationalities or other details.

They said the assassins would be turned over to the Pan-Arab peacekeeping force being assembled by the Arab League.

Police sources said five members of the Lebanese Socialist Revolutionary Organization had been picked up by Al Fatah Palestinian guerrillas, an urban guerrilla group.

That organization seized the Beirut branch of the Bank of America in 1973, took 56 hostages and killed an American and four Lebanese before police stormed the building.

Bunco plan called legal by attorney said it was illegal, said Sabittini. "Only a king, a queen or a court can rule something illegal. If his (Scott's) warning is instructional and educational, then fine. There's also an educational warning on a package of cigarettes," Sabittini said.

Although he has invested in the plan, Sabittini said he has never received a bond because the people he sold to can't sell theirs. He said he wasn't interested in the money.

"It's the principle," said Sabittini. "I will turn over every bond I receive to a facility for the severely handicapped."

Sabittini said many people from all walks of life have been involved in the plan, from teenagers to senior citizens. He said they include prominent members of communities, lawyers, psychologists, and many state employees.

The Sheriff of Union County, Larry Tripp, said that he, along with several of his deputies, had purchased and received bonds. Tripp said he had received eight bonds in the mail.

"I'm the one who see's my people getting ripped-off every day and this isn't a rip-off. There's more of a chance of getting hurt walking down the street at night than getting hurt by investing in it," said Tripp.

Tripp said many of the people in his county were hoping the bonds would bring them security for the future. "It knocked a lot of people's dreams in the head when the attorney general's office came out the way it did."

He said that no one he talked to really expected to get rich, but a few hundred dollars could go a long way for many people.

Auto crash takes life of student

An SIU student died Wednesday from injuries suffered when a car in which he was a passenger swerved off Ill. 149, five miles west of Murphysboro and overturned, state police said.

Michael Etzkorn of Blue Island, Ill., was riding in a car driven by John R. Moskaluk, 21, of Chicago, when, according to Moskaluk's police report, he swerved to avoid another vehicle, slid off the road and overturned.

Etzkorn and Moskaluk were both taken to Memorial Hospital of Carbondale where Etzkorn died at 3:37 p.m., police said. Police said Moskaluk was treated for minor injuries and released.

A Viet Nam veteran, Etzkorn graduated from Dwight D. Eisenhower High School in Blue Island and majored in avionics at SIU.

The body was taken to Huffman Funeral Home, 210 W. Oak St., in Carbondale and will be transferred to Hickey-Vandenberg Chapel in Blue Island. Etzkorn will be buried at Saint Benedict's Church in Evergreen Park, Ill. He is survived by his wife Susan and parents, Michael and Kathryn Etzkorn.

Motion filed by massage parlor denied

At a hearing at Jackson County Courthouse Thursday Judge Robert Schwartz denied a motion that would have allowed a massage parlor to operate in Elkhart.

Judge Schwartz upheld his earlier May 23 ruling which supported the legality of the Village of Elkhart's massage parlor ordinance. David Rothenberg, attorney representing Continental Health Clubs Ltd., said the May 23 ruling is scheduled for an appeal.

At the hearing Rothenberg requested a motion that would allow the massage parlor at 210 N. 4th St., operate in conflict with the city's ordinance until the legality of the ordinance could be decided in the Appellate Court.

Continental Health Clubs Ltd. moved its massage parlor to Elkhart in the spring after a Carbondale city ordinance banning Rothenberg alleges that the Elkhart ordinance is unconstitutional and illegal and that it is impossible to operate a massage parlor in compliance with the law.

He said requiring the massage parlor and masseuses to be licensed is asking too much. He attacked the ordinance's educational requirement that all masseuses have 70 hours of classroom instruction in an approved school of the state to which he added, "there is none."

Hear the frantic cry of poor government

By Arthur Hoppe

Like all good Americans I love my Government. So when I ran into it the other day I congratulated it heartily on its Bicentennial.

"Please don't mention it," said the Government nervously. "This is one of those years they're out to get me."

"Who's out to get you?"

"The Presidential candidates," said the Government with a shudder. "Every four years they go around the country whipping the public into a frenzy against me."

"Nonsense. They're all saying this is the year to renew our faith in you."

"That's what they say. But they hate me. Everybody hates me. Everybody's always hated me. Oh, I know they do."

"There, there," I said. "Pull yourself together. We don't need a paranoid Government around here."

"Who's paranoid?" said the Government. "Even my own Founding Fathers hated me. They called me a necessary evil. They said the smaller and punier I was the better. And they bound me up in checks and balances to keep me that way."

"That's terrible."

"It's no wonder I grew up to be such a mess. Everybody looks on me as a bunch of lazy bureaucrats, venal politicians, dumb spies and greedy tax collectors. Ask anyone, they think my first name is 'Damn.'"

"Yes, I've noticed that."

"But it peaks every four years. The candidates vie with other in telling the whole world how rotten I am."

"That doesn't sound very patriotic."

"Of course it's not. But they don't care. The conservatives say I'm an inefficient, gluttonous, tax-guzzling monster out to destroy the glorious free enterprise system. And they're going to cut me to the bone."

"How painful."

"And the liberals say I'm a snooping, power-mad, would-be despot out to destroy the liberty of the people and they're going to tie me in knots."

"How restrictive. But which candidate do you think will get the job of taking care of you for the next four years?"

"As usual," said the Government gloomily, "it will be the one who hates me most of all."

"Poor old Government," I said consolingly. "How unfair!" Then a thought struck me. "But if we've been vowing for two centuries to cut you to the bone and tie you in knots, how come you're now the biggest, fattest, most powerful Government we've ever seen?"

"One more question like that, Mac," said the Government brusquely, "and I'll audit your tax returns."

Jones' priorities need changing

By Jim Santori
Editorial Page Editor

Now that the new student body president has outlined his goals for this year, we are finally able to get a peek at his priorities, interests and desires. It appears he wants to be an influential Mr. Clean for the administration.

In an interview, Student Body President Tom Jones said his plans include making sure the campus organizations are prevented from spending money given to them for other purposes than what the money was intended for.

Jones also highlighted his office-cleaning ability in weeding out ancient documents from the student government office files.

Tight financial management and office efficiency are admirable goals for any group which has been given responsibility to watch out for our affairs.

But to stress these points, implying they are the important overriding goals as the new student body president, shows at least a lack of clear insight into the problems on campus and, at the most, a dangerous departure from the intended role of an elected student official.

Over a number of years, students have been trying to increase their voice in school matters, especially when it concerns such things as tenure and curriculum decisions, activities for students, and student rights and privileges on campus and in the community.

The real key to what the new student president is all about can be found in one statement. Jones said "We don't want to waste a lot of time on something we could never change."

What is it that we could never change? If everyone believed that, much less a person in a leadership position, we would still be chiseling flint stones in caves! This campus needs effective, dynamic leadership from someone who is concerned about the students as individuals, not as accounting numbers. And we need a sensitive monitor looking after student interests.

Officials should disclose finances

By U.S. Rep. Paul Simon
Illinois 24th District

If the political columnists and commentators are correct, the most popular way to run for public office this year is to run against the government.

There's a disturbing irony in that approach in the same year we're celebrating the 200th anniversary of the revolution that helped establish our form of government.

There are reasons so many Americans are open to that appeal.

Part of it is Watergate; part of it is the deep division and dissension which the Vietnam War caused. But one reason also is the distrust of the personal financial dealings of office-holders.

I won't argue whether those in public office, as a group, are any more honest or dishonest than bankers or farmers or ministers. But, because politicians are in the public spotlight, their mistakes in judgement or their outright abuses of public trust sometimes seem more frequent.

I have contended during my years in public life that the best way to win the confidence of those who elect us is to lay all of our financial dealings out on the table.

The only way we can really solve the conflict of interest problems is to require complete personal financial disclosure by all key elected and appointed officials.

In my years in the state legislature, many times a member stood up on the floor and said, "I won't vote on this bill because it affects my business, and voting would be a conflict of interest."

Often, that is just a pious way of getting out of controversial votes.

A farmer who is in the legislature or in Congress should vote on agricultural legislation—but we should know of his farm interests. An insurance man should give his insights into that field, but we should know of his economic investments there.

The way to avoid the problems caused by the overlap between private and public interests is to let the people you're serving know exactly where your financial interests lie so that they can decide if you're serving them or serving your pocketbook.

Each year I distribute copies of my annual financial statement to all newspapers and radio and television stations in our district. I also insert it in the Congressional Record.

The statement is a detailed accounting of all our assets and liabilities. It's a long statement, and most papers and broadcast media don't have the space or time for all of it.

If this practice had been written into law for all members of Congress and other key federal and state officials decades ago, maybe there would be more confidence in government and maybe candidates wouldn't be running against the government in our Bicentennial year.

Alcohol overused on college campuses

By Chris Moenich
Daily Egyptian Staff Writer

Would you like a beer? How about going downtown and getting loaded? Isn't someone going to go to the liquor store? Hey, we're collecting for a keg, got some change? Pressure.

Alcohol, the American tradition, is the most abused yet socially acceptable drug thus making the use of alcohol the top behavioral problem on campus, according to Arthur Casebeer, associate professor of higher education.

Casebeer said, "Alcohol consumption is as prevalent on campuses as anywhere else in American society, and since it is a social custom we must learn to deal with it effectively."

Casebeer recommends an alcohol awareness program for gathering facts and distributing information to students. Programs for treatment alternatives would be made available to master, doctoral, and university housing personnel for dealing with alcohol abuse.

He does not advocate a society of teetotalers; rather, responsible use of alcohol.

"We're concerned with alcohol abuse," he said. "When one's ability and judgment is impaired it indicates abuse."

Eighty-five to ninety per cent of the 11 million college students drink and a large percentage have a drinking problem. Casebeer said the stress of college, home environment, and fear of social acceptability may create the need for alcohol.

Through research and surveys he hopes to find positive alternatives through activities that are not always alcohol related. Last semester he surveyed a residence hall and found the University needed such research.

"Some counselors only think in terms of their own interests for dealing with the problem," he said.

"We need to offer a variety of treatments to suit the individual."

University housing coordinators could try alternative programs—therapy groups and counseling—for dealing with abuse. Casebeer said the Department of Higher Education is not able to put them in the position of counselors but they can make information available to the students through the coordinators.

Synergy staff member, Scott Vierende, said they would like to work with resident hall coordinators to incorporate alcohol awareness programs.

A program which would include crisis intervention could be included in student resident assistant training, Vierende said.

He said a person experiencing trouble with alcohol abuse could be referred to someone capable of helping. The referral system provides alternatives for solving the personal problems which may have created the condition.

Last spring, Synergy, Health Center Prevention Service, the Alcohol Resource Center, and representatives from University Housing got together to prepare a draft proposal for alcohol abuse prevention.

They compiled a training package that increased communication among students and housing coordinators, alternative prevention, and ideas for increasing a supportive home environment in the dorms.

Synergy has applied for funds from various alcohol abuse programs. Vierende said they would like to supply information to housing coordinators prior to the fall semester.

D.E. reporter gropes for bar improvements

By Michael P. Mullin
Daily Egyptian Staff Writer

The editor paced nervously around the newsroom. "I'd like to see something on the bars," he said. "Some sort of review on what they have done since the last semester ended. Who can we get for it?"

"Well," a staffer answered sheepishly from his smoking Remington, "you're downtown more than almost anybody, expect maybe Moon."

I tried to look inconspicuous behind my typewriter, but the editor's steely eyes caught me anyway. "You there, you with the typewriter cover over your head, hit the pavement and give me 20 inches."

Armed with a $2 expense account from the business office and my trusty pad and pencil, I headed for the few blocks on Illinois Avenue known as the "strip."

The first bar you come to as you head up the "strip" from campus is Gatsby's. For those not yet initiated to the strip, Gatsby's is downstairs at the corner of Freeman and South Illinois. Gatsby's has received a full liquor license since last semester ended, so mixed drinks are now available.

As diversion from the drinking and free pop corn, live folk music is occasionally played by local artists.

Jim Winfree, owner of Gatsby's and the adjacent Crazy Horse Billiards, wanted a walk through arrangement by the city has denied permission so far. Thus the plywood covering the hole knocked out by the optimistic owner. Gatsby's offers what is probably the largest selection of beers, domestic and imported, in town.

Staggering out of Gatsby's, I headed North to the intersection of College and South Illinois. I headed east to the recently remodeled and reopened Buffalo Bob's, located next to the 10 tracks on College. The New Bob's looks a lot nicer than the old one, and there is added table seating on the lowest floor of the three level bar. A horseshoe bar dominates the top level. Mixed drinks and beer are available at average prices.

Just north of the College-South Illinois intersection is the American Tap. The Tap has a two level table-booth seating set up plus a bar.

The lower level features a newly-installed giant TV screen (about eight feet by five feet) for your viewing enjoyment. The tap used to have live entertainment every once in awhile, but with the installation of the new TV system, the stage area is gone.

Das Fass is right across the street from the Tap. They offer German atmosphere, Carbondale style. Included is the usual array of drinks and beer, plus the additional attraction of live bands outside on the patio. This is probably the best spot for live entertainment at any of the bars. There's usually room to breathe and the cover charge is usually slight.

Manager Gary Vogel says Das Fass has gotten complaints from the city about the noise from the bands but plans on having live music "as long as the city doesn't jump on us."

A couple doors north of the Varsity Theater is The Club. The Club recently acquired a new set of owners and a face lift. The remodeling makes the place seem a little more airy, but it is still hot when crowded, as are all the bars. The Club features live bands at a slight cover. There are pinball machines in the back.

Pizza King, or more popularly, PK's is just north of Cherry on South Illinois. It has been repainted and substantially cleaned up. PK's offers the lowest prices on the strip, a large group of pinball machines, pool tables, and excellent hot lunches and sandwiches during the day.

Judy Orser, a PK's bartender, claims PK's to be the friendliest bar in town. "We're still in the process of remodeling," Orser said.

Across the street from PK's sits Merlin's, the disco capital of Southern Illinois. Over break, Merlin's remodeled the small bar and middle bar, while the disco room remains its opulent self. Merlin's has re-introduced live bands in the small bar. During the week, admission will be free with Student ID. There will be a cover on the weekends.

Ironically, it will cost more to listen to records in the disco side than it will to boogie to live rock and roll in the small bar. And if you want to sample both, you'll have to pay two cover charges. Merlin's also has the most expensive drinks around. Somebody has to pay for that fireproof rug.

"We'll have all kinds of specials during the summer," Don Hankus, Merlin's manager said. "There will be special prices on drinks and other promotions."

Merlin's middle bar keeps its large bar and booths, but adds several pinball machines to make it a sort of amusement meeting ground for people from the disco and the small bar.

So there you have the strip. It's got something for everybody. Two other bars, located north of PK's and Merlin's, provide additional diversion.

The Dugout, next to Bandito's and the train station, formerly Peppermint Lounge, won't be open until July 1. All business transactions have not been completed, but tentative owner Jack Price says the Dugout will be sports oriented. "We want to attract ball players, intramural participants and the park districts," Price said.

Washington Street Underground is, as its name implies, on Washington Street below ABC Liquors. It's a nice enough bar, but its ambience is sometimes not for everyone, though at other times the music is jazz and a cut above the brutal vibes on electric rock.

REAL ESTATE

ST. LOUIS (AP)—The real estate industry is on its way to a substantial recovery in 1976, says Jerome L. Howard, president of the Mortgage Bankers Assn. of America.

Howard said here recently that sales of houses are up more than 50 per cent from the recession low at the beginning of 1975.

URANUS SHOT

WASHINGTON (AP)—National Aeronautics and Space Administration scientists will try to send a spacecraft to Uranus in 1985.

The craft, says the National Geographic Society, would send back photos and other data about the planet, which measures almost four times the diameter of earth.

Uranus was discovered in 1781 by William Herschel.

Patrons of the American Tap enjoy the new TV set that was recently installed downstairs.

Wisconsin's bicentennial donation, outdoor museum, opens June 30

EAGLE, Wis. (AP)—Even the pines are immigrants. The State Historical Society's Old World Wisconsin, having been visited already by such notables as Queen Margrethe of Denmark, opens at last to the public June 30 as Wisconsin's chief contribution to the nation's Bicentennial fete.

The outdoor museum in southeastern Wisconsin is reminiscent of Old Sturbridge Village or Plymouth Plantation or Williamsburg as a reconstruction of 19th century, pioneer homesteads and villages.

Yet it is unique in that it emphasizes the cosmopolitan ethnic heritage of cultures which immigrants imported to Wisconsin, ranging from German-style log houses with energy-minded southern-exposure windows to a chapel once built by a farming community of black persons.

Only a part of the projected 576-acre development on Wisconsin 67 is ready for the initial tourist invasion. Construction is to continue for years, providing visitors with what researcher Marty Perkins describes as an educational experience in watching how pioneers built their hand-hewn log homes, barns, smoke-houses, school houses and pasture fences. Eventually the Historical Society intends to staff the museum with blacksmiths and other period craftsmen, ala Old Sturbridge, Mass., or Harrodsburg, Ky.

Meantime, costumed college students will serve as guides, explaining the history and meaning of the structures which are being relocated from throughout the state.

None of the structures is phoney. Each is a legitimate antique, including a small 1842 church which, out of proportion to its size, has the distinguished footnote of being Wisconsin's first official Roman Catholic cathedral.

House defeats no-fault divorce bill

SPRINGFIELD, Ill. (AP)—Despite a warning that it was "marching right back to the dark ages," the Illinois House defeated Wednesday a bill to allow no-fault divorces in Illinois.

The measure failed on a 78 to 76 vote, 11 short of the number needed for passage, after opponents argued it would dramatically increase the number of divorces in Illinois.

"In my opinion this bill attacks the family structure as we know it in this state today," said Rep. Richard F. Kelly, D-East Hazel Crest.

Under a no-fault divorce, the court may grant an end to the marriage on grounds that there are "irreconcilable differences" without regard to which party is at fault.

Current Illinois law requires the court to find one of the parties at fault—due to adultery, drunkenness or other misconduct.

The proposed measure was not a "pure" no-fault bill because it would also have let stand the traditional fault-based grounds for divorce. Under "pure" no-fault systems, irreconcilable differences become the only grounds for divorce.

Rep. Charles J. Fleck, R-Chicago, warned House members that if they defeated the measure "you're going to be marching right back to the dark ages where our law was first passed 100 years ago."

Other proponents argued the bill would eliminate the dishonesty and perjury that occur when parties try to prove fault under the current divorce system.

The measure, sponsored by the House Judiciary Committee, had the backing of the Illinois State Bar Association and the Illinois Chapter of the American Academy of Matrimonial Lawyers.

Hotel rents rooms, sells beds

SODA SPRINGS, Calif. (AP) — At the Soda Springs Hotel, if you like the bed you slept in the night before, you can buy it.

And that goes for the matching wardrobe, the end tables, the mirror, and whatever else you might fancy.

The hotel is more than a hotel, restaurant and lounge, it is one big antique shop — 36 rooms of different furniture, all for sale.

It all started four years ago when Maggi Littenstein got tired of her routine executive's job in San Francisco. First it was an item in the classified advertising section of a newspaper. That was followed by some foresight, some financial haggling and soon she was the proud owner of a hotel.

She and Lorraine Wells, an old friend, began turning the then rundown interior of the structure into a home, a hobby and a business.

The hotel's granite walls, erected in 1929, were unchanged, but the inside, in their words, had been ruined.

While they began refurbishing it a bit at a time, they also began filling it with antiques.

"Our idea was to make this a big home, just the way we wanted it," Maggi explained.

Visitors and guests began putting on pressure to buy their antiques. The women relented, and once they began the practice, realized they didn't need to stop.

Old furniture from around the world finds its way into the Soda Springs Hotel. If it sells, fine, if it doesn't well that's fine with the owners, too.

Because the hotel is near Donner

Pass in the Sierra Nevada Mountains, snowy winters preclude a large movement of new furnishings, and the selling is slow. But comes spring, and the furniture sells quickly and is replaced. It comes to the hotel from buyers and auctions.

The pieces add a quaint air to the hotel, as do the numerous plants, wood paneling and the occasional train which whistles by on the nearby tracks.

"It wasn't always like this," said Maggi. "The previous owners had plastic and vinyl all over the place. It robbed the building of its natural atmosphere."

Maggi and her husband Marvin, along with Lorraine and some employees, run the hotel.

Family planning lowers death rate

BALTIMORE (AP) Federally-subsidized family planning programs appear to narrow the gap between white and non-white infant mortality rates, according to a study by Johns Hopkins University.

The study showed that increases in the use of family planning services by poor women of the child bearing age were paralleled by decreases in non-white infant mortality rates between 1969 and 1973.

Non-white infant mortality in nine Maryland counties fell by more than 26 per cent during this period, while the use of family planning services by needy non-white women rose by 26 per cent.

Drs. Melvyn Thorne and Lawrence Green, who conducted the study, said the lower infant mortality rate cannot be accounted for by general improvement in the living conditions in the counties since they did not experience a pattern of higher incomes or improved social services.

The researchers said available data does not indicate that prenatal clinic visits, well-baby services, improved immunization or the availability of abortion accounted for the improvements in the non-white infant mortality rate.

Instead, Thorne and Green reasoned that the use of birth control reduces the infant mortality rate by reducing the number of high risk infants born.

Doctors associate infant mortality with poverty, very young and very old maternal age, short birth intervals, and with large numbers of children born to one woman.

In the base years of 1969 and 1970, the study showed that only 18 per cent of the needy, non-white women in the counties studied were making use of birth control services supplied by state and federal agencies.

In 1973 and 1974, 41 per cent of the target population was using the services. The number of active non-white users of public birth control facilities increased from 2,488 to 5,508 during the period.

The study, which covered counties where there were more than 10 non-white infant deaths during 1969 and 1970, showed the greatest decreases in non-white infant mortality to be in the counties which also had the greatest increases in the proportion of needy women using public family planning services.

In the two-year base period, Prince Georges County had 137 non-white infant deaths. In 1972 and 1973 after the expansion of federally funded family planning services, the county had 106 non-white infant deaths.

Non-white infant deaths in the county declined from 27 per 1,000 live births to 19 per 1,000 live births.

Only one of the nine counties studied experienced an increase in non-white infant mortality. St. Marys County had 15 non-white infant deaths in the first period and

Grant committee begins screening

The Student-to-Student Grant committee will meet at 2 p.m. Friday to begin screening applications for summer term grants.

The meeting will be in Room 343, Woody Hall.

Vincent Sykes, committee member, said the committee may be able to announce awards by the end of June. Applications for the grants, which are funded by a $225 student fee, closed during spring semester.

Sykes urges all committee members to attend the Friday meeting so that screening of applications can get under way.

17 in the second period.

The Hopkins researchers believe their study is the first to provide direct evidence that family planning programs can improve the health of populations served, although health planners have acted on the assumption for years.

Rush-hour gunman kills man

CHICAGO (AP)—A gunman opened fire in a rush-hour commuter train packed with 100 passengers Thursday, killing a man and seriously injuring his sister.

Two other passengers were slightly injured in the panic which swept through the elevated train as it sped from the South Side toward the Loop.

The assailant escaped, and police said they were searching for a former boyfriend of the woman, Rose Turner, 21. A hospital spokesman said Miss Turner was "very critical."

Her brother, Charles, 36, was hit in the chest and died about 2 hours later in surgery.

The gunshots rang out in the lead unit of the eight-car Chicago Transit Authority train as it passed 40th Street, heading north.

The man "pulled a revolver and started shooting," said police Capt. James Delaney. "He fired several times. Naturally, there was pandemonium. It was a crowded car."

The car seats about 50 persons and as many more were standing, crowding the aisle. Police said the sound of gunfire sent the 100 passengers screaming and ducking for cover.

The mortician notified CTA headquarters by train-telephone and the CTA alerted police.

By the time the train broke to a halt at 35th street, police officers were rushing up the staircase of the elevated structure.

"They went up onto the platform and were told of a disturbance aboard the train," said Deputy Chief Walter Valle. "When they entered the train, the offender ran down the stairs. They just missed each other."

Marty Turner, mother of the wounded passengers, said her daughter had been threatened with a gun recently by a former boyfriend.

"Oh, Lordy, why did this have to happen," Mrs. Turner exclaimed.

She said her son, Charles, had been accompanying her daughter on the train since the gun incident.

Police used a helicopter and dog teams in an unsuccessful effort to track the assailant in the 35th Street neighborhood.

Activities handbook now available

A "Student Activities Handbook" is now available for all recognized student organizations, their advisers and selected offices on campus. The handbook is a guide to co-curricular programs, productions, publications and organizations.

Published by the Student Activities Center, the book is designed to provide assistance to students and student organizations in planning and developing activities for students.

Contained in the book are listings of student programs with explanations of what they do and a list of recognized student organizations. University policies, procedures and services governing student organizations are also included.

The Student Activities Center serves as a resource agency to almost 300 student organizations. Staff members assist student groups with activity programming and organization.

The Student Activities Center is located on the third floor of the Student Center.

Wandering poet Wolman finishing 'Pickle' trilogy

The Banana Sea

"I see the banana sea
Me me, me me, me me
I see the banana sea, flowing wild in the blue breeze.
Ble me, I see the banana sea
So free, so free, so free
This blue banana sea, so free so free so free
By me by me I say
And see the sea I say, the sea so free by me
Has his free sea I say,
By me by me I say and see
This blue shade sea I see by me this sea so free by me I say I see This blue banana sea I see by me."

By Arnold Wolman, copyright 1974.

By Tim Powers
Daily Egyptian Staff Writer

Arnie Wolman, author of the trilogy "Tickle the Pickle" and "Tickle the Pickle Meets Marsha the Mushroom" is presently completing the last segment, "Tickle the Pickle Meets God."

Wolman's reading of his poem "Spaced Space" was the subject of a short film made the University of Wisconsin's department of physics whose Dr. Robert March described the story as "the first clear description of Einstein's space theories."

Wolman is a traveling, self-publishing poet who barbers his books for love, money, food or friendliness.

It's easy to file people into certain categories and it might be easy to file Wolman as a simple, wandering wacked-out poet. But you would have to account for the fact that there are over 20,000 copies of "Tickle the Pickle" in print being distributed throughout the country and that Wolman directed the mortgage research at the John Hancock Building in Chicago from 1965-67.

The story of "Tickle the Pickle" is the story of a pickle named Tickle who lives in a forest with his friends Breezy the cloud and Todd the mushroom. One day a hunter invades their forest and threatens to kill some of the animals. Tickle and his friends stop the hunters heartless killing and help him rediscover the importance of all life. It's designed as a coloring book for kids but its disarming simplicity attracts adults as well.

"Tickle the Pickle" is followed by "Tickle the Pickle Meets Marsha the Mushroom." Here Tickle with the help of the converted hunter, Mish, feeds a group of greedy land developers who threaten to tear up the forest, the magic mushroom named Marsha. Unfortunately Marsha is only partially successful in enlightening the developers to their greed.

"It might be misconstrued through a quick reading of "Marsha the Mushroom" that I believe that mushrooms are the answer," Wolman said, "but in "Tickle the Pickle Meets God" this will all be Straightened out."

Wolman has had seven different books of poetry published in the United States and Europe, he has also helped six other poets and two artists get published.

"I am one of the few major writers in this country that has not given in to the publishing industry."

Wolman likes to say "it only takes 50,000 copies to make a bestseller and I've already gotten 45,000 of my books out in print though I'm not expecting them to give me credit for having a best-seller."

"We have to get away from thinking that people will only buy what the publisher sells. The entertainment industries in this country are at least as money hungry as General Motors."

The Wolman method of distributing his books is simple. He uses his books as currency. Sometimes "Tickle the Pickle" will buy him a shower, sometimes "Wheat Germ 2" a collection of some of his poetry will buy him a meal, and sometimes "Tino El Pepino" (spanish translation of "Tickle the Pickle") will buy him a hug.

And hugs are important to Wolman. He says that he feels the tension of neighbor not knowing neighbor, of people doing senseless jobs they neither like nor understand, of people caught up in systems they think they have no control over.

And so he's developed the concept of spaced space a metaphysical exercise which reads like a poem and enables the listener to relax. By offering "Tickle the Pickle," Wolman hopes to show everyone their potentialities as individuals. The possibility of being free to do exactly what one wants to do, as Arnie Wolman does.

SIU Press issues classic whodunit

The Southern Illinois University Press will get some star-studded assistance in promoting its most recent release, "The Blue Dahlia," a previously unpublished screenplay by detective story master Raymond Chandler.

Aian Ladd, Veronica Lake and William Bendix star in the 1946 film, which will be shown Friday, June 25 in the Student Center Auditorium at 7 and 9 p.m. Chandler's screenplay, plus a memoir by producer John Houseman and an afterword by Matthew Brucoli, was released this month in both clothbound and paperback versions.

Although originally planned as a full-length novel, "The Blue Dahlia" became the script for Ladd's last picture before entering the armed forces during World War II. The story concerns a returning war hero who finds his wife involved with another man, then learns she's been murdered and finally works to solve the case himself.

According to Lois Bursack, advertising and promotion assistant for the Press, British printing rights for the book have been sold to Elm Tree Books of Hamish Hamilton, and it has been chosen as a Quality Paperback Book Club selection.

Bursack said inquiries have been sent to other foreign publishers, and the Press hopes that this will be the first in a series of screenplay printings.

The movie is free and is sponsored by the SIU-C Press and the Student Center Book Store.

Students in the SIU-C archaeological field school map a northeastern Arizona site slated for stripmining. Grubstaked by a grant from the Peabody Coal Co., they are prospecting for relics from the past, hoping to reclaim them before the draglines move in.

Student anthropologists help coal firm 'mine' Black Mesa

A $187,000 grant from Peabody Coal Co. is helping students from several universities learn modern-day techniques of conservation archaeology at an Arizona field school conducted by SIU-C.

Black Mesa, in northeastern Arizona, is the location of rich deposits of coal, as well as some priceless heirlooms from this continent's ancient past. And Peabody will mine—after SIU-C anthropologist have had their go at the area.

Conservation archaeology, a new study major at SIU-C, involves modern techniques for locating quick excavations at potentially valuable sites threatened by mining or construction.

Black Mesa contains a 50-mile square archaeological site, whose finds have predated inhabitants to 200 B.C. It also possesses greatly-needed stores of coal, which Peabody will mine—after SIU-C archaeologist have had their go at the area.

Students from the University of Arizona, the University of California at Los Angeles, University of Michigan, Southern Methodist University and the State University of New York at Binghamton, as well as SIU-C, are gaining experience along with college credit working at the Black Mesa field school.

"Few disciplines have the availability of such practical and effective teaching methods as those the anthropology field school provides," said George J. Gumerman, chairman of the anthropology department and co-ordinator of the Black Mesa project in 1967 when he was at Prescott College in Arizona.

The students—some 50 at a time—live and sleep in tents and temporary buildings and spend most of their time putting classroom instruction to practical application in the Arizona earth.

Some of their finds—notably ceramics—have achieved widespread attention.

Also working on the Black Mesa site are between 10 and 15 Navaho Indians. The Black Mesa project is located on Navaho and Hopi Indian reservations, land which Peabody leases from the Indians for approximately $100 million in royalties.

"The Indians have been most understanding and helpful," said Steve Plog, field school director.

They have also proven to be skilled artisans, according to Gumerman.

"They are extremely good excavators, who have a special feel for the soil," said Gumerman.

One thing which distinguishes the SIU-C field school from others is the method used to excavate the vestiges of Black Mesa's past.

Conservation archaeology employs many techniques considered unsettling by some archaeologists, Gumerman said. "Some might consider it sacrilegious to use a backhoe or road grader to excavate—and justifiably so, perhaps."

"But when you are operating with time limitations and must go where the coal is, these methods of excavation are occasionally necessary."

Gumerman said there are times when this new kind of archaeology also has definite advantages.

"We have been forced to get into areas of the Southwest not covered before—seemingly unproductive areas, which have yielded impressive findings," Gumerman said.

He said archaeologists are more apt to go to areas of higher population.

Pipeline expert defends quality of Alaska welds

ANCHORAGE, Alaska (AP) — Welded sections of the trans-Alaskan oil pipeline are "the best in the history of pipelining," says the man responsible for the system, as a congressional panel prepares to investigate the system's construction.

"We're just over-controlling" the quality of welds on the huge pipeline system, says Edward L. Patton, chairman of Alyeska Pipeline Service Co.

The congressional hearing, which began Thursday in Washington, stems from an Alyeska audit acknowledging the existence of about 4,000 problem welds, which hold together each 40-foot pipe section.

Meanwhile, the head of the International Pipeliners Union 798 in Tulsa, Okla., through which all pipeline welders are hired, has suggested the problem might not be the welds as much as the pipes.

"I have to think that there's something undetectable about the welds that's not right, maybe the texture of the steel," said Clifton Throneberry Jr., business agent for the world's only pipeline workers union.

Throneberry said the union has about 2,000 welders currently working on the Alaska pipeline, and that their average salary, including overtime, is about $65,000 a year.

"It's inconceivable to me to think there are 4,000 bad welds, or even 1,000 bad welds," said Throneberry, noting that Alyeska officials in Tulsa test and certify every welder before he's sent to Alaska to work on the pipeline.

Bar's music called too loud

Several "late-night" complaints to city councilmen about "loud music" coming from a South Illinois Avenue bar, have sparked the city council to ask the Carbondale Planning Commission to investigate.

Councilman Joe Dakin and Mayor Neal Eckert said they have received several complaints from near-by residents about post-midnight music coming from Das Fass 517 S. Illinois Ave.

"It's all a matter of what you're tuned into, rock music or railroad trains," said Herbert Vogel, owner of Das Fass. Vogel told the council during an informal meeting Monday that passing trains make more noise than the music.

James Rayfield, director of the planning commission said Carbondale does not have sound measuring equipment, but said he would ask the state to investigate. A state investigation would not cost the city anything he said.

Tree project draws protest

BLOOMINGTON (AP)—An attempt in McLean County to restore land to its natural state has met with natural opposition.

Parklands Foundation, which buys land to convert it to forest, this spring began work on 94 acres next to Lake Bloomington.

Opposition to the project, according to Stanley Lantz, Parklands president, came from local residents: Squirrels.

"We planted 650 shellback hickory nuts this spring," he said. "We soon discovered that squirrels had taken over, digging the nuts up and burying them elsewhere.

At least 80 of the nuts have been carried off by the little rodents, Lantz said. "However, squirrels aren't very smart. They forget where they bury . . . so the nuts will probably germinate and grow where ever they are."

Joliet cancels rock concert

JOLIET, Ill. (AP)—An on-again, off-again rock concert scheduled for Sunday in Joliet Memorial Stadium has been canceled because of poor ticket sales.

Local promoters originally intended the concert, starring such groups as Nectar and Blue Oyster Cult, to attract some 10,000 young persons, but city officials, fearing disruptions, demanded that a $100,000 bond be posted if more than 5,000 spectators were to attend.

The promoters agreed to keep ticket sales under 5,000, but canceled the event when they were not able to sell even that many.

14 thesis shows slated for campus galleries

Fourteen graduate students have scheduled MFA thesis exhibits during the summer session at either Mitchell Gallery in the Home Economics Building or in the North Gallery (C wing) of Faner Hall.

The schedule for the exhibits is as follows: Robert Barber, graphics and metals, June 17-23, Mitchell Gallery; Linda Beresnevicius, paintings and Daryl Meier, metals, June 16-22 at Faner North Gallery; Joseph Cliff, metals, June 28 to July 2, Mitchell Gallery; Liza Littlefield, metals and William O. Huggins, metals-fabric-drawing, June 29 to July 5, Faner North Gallery; Jer Patryjak, drawings, July 9 to 15, Mitchell Gallery; Tom Badger, ceramics-bronze and Tom Newirth, sculpture, July 8-14, Faner North Gallery; Dan Owen, sculpture and Mary Strasevicius, paintings, July 21-27, Mitchell Gallery; James Sanders, weaving, July 22-28, Faner North Gallery; William Morningstar, sculpture and Steven Mercer, paintings, July 30 to August 5, Mitchell Gallery.

Public viewing hours at both galleries from now through August 6 will be 10 a.m. to noon and 1 p.m. to 4 p.m. on weekdays. Both galleries will be closed on Monday, July 5, which is an official university holiday. All exhibits will open with public receptions from 7 to 9 p.m. on the first date listed for each exhibit.

Contender's sister helps heal people

By George W. Cornell
AP Religion Writer

NEW YORK (AP) —Helping emotionally scarred persons to accept forgiveness—and thus to accept themselves—is a key to the ministry of Ruth Carter Stapleton, the perceptive, pretty sister of Democratic presidential contender Jimmy Carter.

She uses a combination of psychology and Christian teaching. "Most people had never thought of doing that before," she says. "That's why it's so new. I have a background in both areas, and they belong together. All I've done is gone back and put the two together."

Thousands maintain she has helped them overcome deep-buried hurts.

Although sometimes misportrayed as a grandstanding "faith-healer," she rejects the term and the technique. "It's not at all what I do," she says.

As a spiritual counselor, she applies parallel premises both of psychology and Christ's loving acceptance of those who consider themselves unloved, unlovable and unacceptable.

"The whole basis of healing is acceptance of oneself," she said in an interview. "When you do that, you can accept other people and become aware of acceptance of God. It's the basis of Christianity, being forgiven, accepted, freed of self-condemnation."

A trim, blue-eyed blonde woman of 46, Mrs. Stapleton of Fayetteville, N.C., calls her approach "inner healing." It's a low-key, introspective process, consisting both of probing childhood experience and prayer focused on Christ's limitless love for each person.

"I work with the inner emotions of people to root out causes of emotional disorders, alcoholism, drug addiction, crippling anxieties," she said. "Most psychologists talk only to the intellect. I try to reach the subconscious—the spirit."

"As a byproduct of emotional healing, many also come to experience deeper dimensions of spiritual growth. Often they may experience physical healing when the psychosomatic causes are removed."

Local palmist reveals problems at hand

"I can read a palm like an open book," said Katherine Johnson, Carbondale's newest palm reader and advisor.

Mrs. Johnson, who is of Rumanian descent, does confidential readings and advisings in her home at 400 E. Walnut St. She, her husband and two of their five children moved to Carbondale about a month ago.

Sitting on the couch in her immaculate living room she talked animatedly about her profession when interviewed recently. She said she has been practicing palmistry professionally for the past 25 years.

"I think I was just gifted. This runs in our family. My grandmother and mother did readings and now my daughter is doing it professionally."

Mrs. Johnson, a dark-complected woman with long black hair, said she never learned how to read palms.

"My grandmother, who was a whiz at this, explained a few things about the lines but even she couldn't believe how fast I picked it up."

She maintains she reads both a person's character and palms.

"If a person is unhappy I can see it in his face. When I look at a palm I put the lines together and read them."

By looking at the lines in a person's palm, she contends she can tell different things about his personality as well as his past, present and future.

People also come to her for advice or consultations after they've had a reading.

"If I read a person's palm and they have a little problem after that, they come back to me for a consultation and I advise them the best I can."

Mrs. Johnson said that some people "come in to have fun but when they leave they're amazed." "I know I'm good by my customers cause when they walk out of here they sure are satisfied. I tell people things are going to happen and they happen."

After pausing to light a cigarette, she began talking about her past. Born in Alabama, she said that her family was always traveling. "This is why I don't talk like I'm from the South," she said, speaking with a Rumanian accent.

She said she began living with her grandmother when she was 10 years old and continued doing so for six years.

"My grandmother would never stay in one place longer than a month. I never did like traveling cause just when I was making friends in one place she'd tell my grandfather, 'I can't take it here anymore. Let's move.'"

She explained that some people call them Rumanian gypsies because "all the gypsies in the old country would travel around in covered wagons doing fortune telling."

"We don't consider ourselves gypsies. I haven't traveled in 20 years. We settled down to put our children through school."

Mrs. Johnson said she has never worked outside of her home.

"We don't believe that it's right to leave the kids and go out to work. That's for the man to do, not us," she said emphatically.

Her husband does tar sealing and is self employed. The Johnsons' came to Carbondale from the Quad Cities area where they had lived for 10 years.

"We moved here because I thought it would be good for my husband's business and my own."

She added that her husband likes to fish and there are lots of lakes in this area. "I like it because it reminds me of Alabama."

Mrs. Johnson said that she has "pretty good customers" in Carbondale, adding that the most of her trade had come from a large orange sign in her front yard.

The large sign has since been replaced by a smaller one because a Carbondale sign ordinance prohibits signs of that size on property not zoned for planned business.

Mrs. Johnson said that before they moved to Carbondale they asked the city if she could set up a business in her home.

"They said go ahead. It's zoned for business. Then they said it's not zoned for business. Now they're letting me operate until I can make a special use application for a home business."

Her business is continuing to grow in spite of this setback. In addition to the sign, she is advertising in several local newspapers and by circulars.

Chimp, buzzards tour Southern Illinois area

COLLINSVILLE (AP)—In one section of Southern Illinois, motorists were confronted with a hitchhiking chimpanzee Thursday while a woman in another section reported a buzzard attack.

In Collinsville a 9-year-old, 100-pound ape named Johnny escaped from his master at a motel and sauntered down the hall, across the parking lot and onto Illinois 157. Keeper J.A. Sheppard of Springfield, who uses the ape for promotional events, said he dozed off and Johnny let himself out of the room.

A popular pet in Sheppard's neighborhood back home, Johnny is in the habit of flagging down friendly motorists for rides. Three motel employees managed to recapture the ape on the other side of the road.

A motel secretary who took charge of Johnny while the manager searched for his owner, said the chimp kissed her.

Mrs. Pat Varity of rural Iuka had a less amicable experience with the animal world. She was sunning herself in her backyard when a flock of buzzards appeared.

"I heard a swishing sound," she said. "The wings make a real weird sound. When I raised up I looked east into the sun and it came right at me. I jumped off the couch and when I looked up again I saw about six of them circling around."

Unhurt but frightened, she called the Marion County sheriff's office for help. They sent Abe Lincoln, an animal warden, to investigate.

"It was a terrible experience," Mrs. Varity said while waiting for Lincoln. "I am still baffled by it."

Dam replacement proposed

WASHINGTON (AP)—The Army Corps of Engineers, Thursday, urged a Senate subcommittee to approve funds to replace deteriorating locks and dam 26 on the Mississippi River near Alton, Ill.

The Corps, in presenting its official proposal to Congress for the first time, said that attempting to repair the existing structure would cost just as much as replacing it and "would almost certainly result from time to time in major traffic delays."

At a separate news conference, while Maj. Gen. Ernest Graves was testifying on Capitol Hill for the Corps, a panel of labor, industry and farm representatives told reporters that trying to repair instead of replacing the locks and dam 26 could shut down the facility completely for as much as a year.

During that time, said John E. Harvey, director of corporate transportation for the Archer Daniels Midland Co. of Decatur, Ill., no barge traffic could move up or down the Illinois side of the river.

Harvey was with a group that included Illinois Farm Bureau President Harold B. Steele. The group held a breakfast session earlier with members of the Illinois congressional delegation. Illinois Sens. Charles H. Percy and Adlai Stevenson III, and a number of Illinois congressmen support replacement.

Environmental groups and railroad interests have been fighting the proposal.

In his testimony before Sen. Mike Gravel's water resources subcommittee Graves said the locks and dam 26 are inadequate for the amount of barge traffic that passes through, with delays averaging 21 hours during the peak October season.

At the news conference, Harvey said barge operators incur added expenses of $150 an hour for every hour delay in passing through the structure.

Graves said the Corps' recommendation is to replace the current structure with a new dam and a 110-foot by 1,200-foot main lock about two miles downstream from the existing dam. The design would provide for an addition of an auxiliary lock at some future date if needed and authorized.

He said the estimated cost of the construction, based on January 1976 costs, is $390 million.

Testifying after Graves were administration witnesses who recommended that Congress defer any action on the matter until after completion of environmental impact statements and a final report by the Corps on questions of capacity and costs.

File lists words spelled backwards

SPRINGFIELD, Mass. (AP) — How many English words end in the letters "gr"? An why would anybody want to know?

An editor at G. & C. Merriam Co., where they put together dictionaries, is looking for a use for his file of 458,000 English words, all spelled backwards.

The file was compiled by the late Dr. Philip Gove, former editor in chief, to fill the idle hours of company typists after the Third International Dictionary had gone to press.

Now it belongs to Dr. Frederick

Mish, and he's not sure what to do with it.

"Sometimes we turn to it when somebody wants to examine a group of words that end in the same way," Dr. Mish said. "But I don't offhand know what use would justify making a backwards dictionary out of it."

As for the letters "gr," there are just three English words that end with them, according to the backwards file: angry, hungry and anhungry.

"Anhungry is an obsolete word synonymous with hungry. Shakespeare used it in his play Coriolanus," Dr. Mish said.

That was easy to learn using the backwards file. The editors simply looked the letters up backwards: "yrg."

The greater question, Dr. Mish, is why anybody would want to know. As part of the company's information service, the editors have been receiving a couple of letters a week asking about "gr."

Group's petitions denied

After a year of petitioning and court action, Crab Orchard Estates, an unincorporated district east of Carbondale has been dealt another setback in its quest to gain village status.

Residents' petitions for incorporation were denied Wednesday by Circuit Judge Snyder Howell of Johnston City. Had the petition been granted, the estates would have been eligible for state health funding, according to James Filla, president of the residents' group.

Homeowners in the district sought incorporation because of poor sewage treatment and other problems in the area. Filla said the city of Carbondale offered to allow district residents voting privileges in city elections contingent upon their paying city taxes.

He said if the estates were annexed to Carbondale the cost to each homeowner for sewer would be close to $3,000 per lot, adding that most area homes cover two lots.

Filla said homeowners have not decided what further action they will take, but opposition to any talk of annexation with Carbondale is certain.

Pronto Don dies, is buried at race track

DUQUOIN, Ill. (AP)—Pronto Don, perhaps the most famous Illinois bred horse, is dead.

Hayes Fair Acres Stables announced the 31-year-old trotter's demise Thursday. He died Saturday in DuQuoin and was buried in the infield of the one-mile DuQuoin State Fair track, site of the annual Hambletonian Stakes.

Pronto Don was harness horse of the year in 1951, one of just two geldings to win the title.

New legislation aids Dekalb

SPRINGFIELD, (AP)—DeKalb County could form a civic center authority and seek state help for construction of an auditorium under legislation which was passed Thursday in the Illinois Senate and sent to the governor.

The measure, which passed the House June 1, lowers from $600 million to $300 million the minimum assessed valuation required before a county or group of counties can form an authority under provisions of an existing state law.

The bill cleared the Senate on a 99 to 3 vote.

The Senate sponsor, Sen. David

Shapiro, R-Ambov, said farm organizations in DeKalb County want to build an agricultural exposition center on or near campus of Northern Illinois University.

A staff report said the measure also would make Adams, Kankakee and Livingston counties eligible for formation of civic center authorities.

Other legislation is pending to remove legal problems with laws approved in past years giving authority for civic centers to Springfield, Rockford, Peoria, Aurora, Decatur, Danville and Madison County.

The Southern Illinois Patchwork on Parade exhibit of quilts will be held at 1 p.m. June 28, at the University Mall. The Quiltmobile from Denver, Colo., will be making a special appearance. There will be quilting demonstrations and quilts on display. Interested persons are encouraged to bring a quilt to show and share as photos will be taken.

The Alto Pass Quilters will give quilting demonstrations at 10 a.m., June 29, at the University Mall. The Patchworks will demonstrate creative patchwork. Averil Mathis and Ruth Brill of Eldorado, Ill., will display unique patterns and quilts.

A recognized student organization can earn $100 for putting together Student Legal Aid Handbooks for the Student Government. The work involves cutting, folding and stapling the handbooks which have already been printed. Contact the Student Government at their offices on the third floor of the Student Center, or phone 536-3393.

Lyman Dennis and Jean Ray, assistant professors in the Science Division of Morris Library, attended the 67th annual conference of the Special Libraries Association held June 6-10, in Denver, Colo. Dennis offered a poster presentation on "Growth of Interlibrary Loan Services in a Major University Science Library," while Ray read a paper entitled "Who Borrows Maps from a University Library Map Collection...and Why?"

The Carbondale Peoples' Bi-Centennial Commission (CPBC) will meet at the Student Christian Foundation, Monday, 8 p.m., to plan for their July 4 trip to Washington, D.C.

U.S. agents seize cocaine

TAMPA, Fla. (AP) — "It was pure, and I mean pure," said a customs agent after seizing seven plastic garbage bags stuffed with $39 million worth of cocaine smuggled in on a banana boat Thursday.

The U.S. Customs agents confiscated 170 pounds of the drug after it was unloaded through a porthole of the boat that had come from Colombia. The smugglers were not apprehended.

An agency spokesman said it was the largest seizure of cocaine ever by U.S. Customs agents and one of the largest drug seizures on record. A patrol officer spotted the trash bags being pulled through a porthole of the Liberian-registered vessel Ea before dawn, a spokesman said. As the officer approached, six or eight men fled across the dock, around a grain elevator and through a field, dropping the bags as they ran.

They got away, but the cocaine was found in the field, officials said. Later, a detector dog sniffed out another three-pound bag, "and we're still looking," an agent said. The federal Drug Enforcement Administration began a search for the smugglers.

"This was the fourth cocaine seizure from this vessel in the past two years," an agent said. "But this was fantastically large."

The others were much smaller quantities—6.1 pounds, 2.5 pounds, and 39 pounds, officials added.

Howlett-Thompson talk taxes

CHICAGO (AP)—Michael J. Howlett, the Democratic candidate for governor, said Thursday he thinks the state's "financial integrity" can be restored without a tax increase but only by unlocking earmarked funds.

Republican contender James R. Thompson immediately countered that Howlett has gone back and forth "on the issue and refused to make 'promises that may not be kept' about a tax increase."

The two candidates clashed at a luncheon in Chicago given by the Young Executives Club of Chicago.

Howlett declared that some $100 million in earmarked funds have been pinpointed by a legislative commission as available for bolstering the state's sagging General Revenue Fund. Asked for more details, he mentioned only an unspecified amount held by the Illinois Building Authority.

"I believe we can restore the state's financial integrity without an increase in taxes," Howlett declared. But he said it could be done by tightening up tax collections, cutting waste and unlocking earmarked funds.

Thompson countered after the luncheon that "unlike Mr. Howlett, who goes back and forth," he would not promise to avoid a tax increase in the two-year gubernatorial term starting in January.

Thompson said that Howlett had earlier promised not to raise taxes in the two-year term, then "three weeks later pledged not to raise them in the first year, then three weeks after that pledged not to raise them because State Treasurer Alan Dixon told him it wouldn't be necessary."

"I refuse to make promises that sound good during the political campaign but in the end may not be kept," Thompson said.

Thompson said borrowing money from earmarked funds to bolster the General Revenue Fund could be a good idea.

The General Revenue Fund is the largest fund in the state treasury and is used to pay for such wide-ranging expenses as mental health, welfare, aid to schools and environmental protection. Earmarked funds often raised through special taxes, contain money set aside for specific purposes.

For example, most gasoline tax revenues go into the Highway Fund where, by law, they can be used only for road construction and repairs. Much of the Agricultural Premium Fund is raised through taxes on parimutuel bets at racetracks and is used for such special purposes as offsetting losses at the Illinois State Fair and trotting purses at county fairs.

On other issues, Thompson proposed to set up 10 general advisory committees to help bring more jobs to Illinois. He also lauded the executive's club for doing "something I have not been able to do in the last three months and that is get my opponent on the same stand with me."

He said such face-to-face meetings were needed to help voters "search the hearts and minds of the candidates."

Hassles delay legal rights handbook

By H.B. Koplowitz

Editor-in-chief

It all began innocently enough. On a sunny spring day in April, 1975, Dennis Sullivan, then student body president, and Ingrid Gadoway, ombudsperson, were having an informal chat in her office.

In general terms they were discussing the plight of the average SIU student who gets worked-over by the system because he isn't aware of the rules and regulations that govern the university and city. Things like library fines, parking violation or bursar holds. For the most part hassles that could be avoided, but that can cost students money, time and grief.

and called the handbook "Dennis Sullivan propaganda."

Joel Spenner, finance committee chairman, took the opposite view and felt that the handbook, if anything, "wasn't harsh enough."

With only minor revision, the welfare committee passed the handbook on to the finance committee which allocated an initial $200 to pay for typesetting costs. According to Sullivan, the first of several media foul-ups occurred when the Daily Egyptian failed to report that the senate had passed the bill.

Ken Temkin, the reporter assigned to cover student government, gave another account could have straightened it out in one day."

Sullivan, who had resigned from student government for academic reasons and because he was "fed up with the bull," vehemently disagreed. "I was up there plenty of times, but out student body president was never there." Sullivan also accused Diggle of breaking appointments and paying lip service to the project.

Both finance committee chairman Spenner and co-editor Coonen defended Sullivan, saying it wasn't his responsibility to oversee student government.

It was then late April, 1976. Time for final exams. And few senators felt like spending their evening folding covers and stapling the handbook together.

After several fruitless attempts to get volunteers, Sullivan and Coonen took the uncut handbooks over to the student government offices where they figured the senators would work on the books, if only to get rid of them.

Diggle took an unsympathetic view of the action. He said he was under the impression that the $800 was supposed to cover the cost of stapling and that he was unaware that student senators were supposed to help. "We'll get the damn things out, only slower," Sullivan just abandoned them," charged Diggle.

The latest plan student government has devised to get the handbooks out is to offer a recognized student organization $100 to fold, staple, and cut some 8,000 handbooks.

Yet through it all, the one thing everyone involved was in agreement on is that a student legal rights handbook was a good idea and that it would provide a valuable service for students.

Thousands of uncut and unstapled handbooks lie stashed behind a filing cabinet...

Gadoway mentioned that the student council of the University of Louisville had put out a handbook informing students of many of these kinds of hassles. Sullivan thought it would be a good idea if SIU did the same thing.

The SIU Student Legal Rights Handbook was born.

Today, one year later, thousands of uncut and unstapled handbooks lie stashed behind a filing cabinet in the student government offices, second floor, Student Union.

The reason the pamphlet which Sullivan had hoped would be out by the beginning of fall semester, 1975, still has not been distributed, is a tangled tale of bureaucratic bungling, charges and countercharges: the elements of a classic fiasco.

During the summer of '75, Sue Coonen, Sullivan's executive assistant, agreed to work with him on the project. Coonen said that to compile the information for the handbook they went to the sources: the Office of Student Life, the Bursar's Office, ACLU, and the police.

Coonen said that by early fall semester they had the information together. Adrian Combs, Daily Egyptian business manager, told Sullivan he could publish 10,000 copies of the handbook for $1,000. Originally Sullivan had hoped to use his presidential contingency fund to pay for the handbook. But he lost control of that account when he ran for and was elected vice president in the spring election.

So Sullivan went before the student government finance committee and requested the money. But the committee balked and Sullivan was forced to let another student government committee, student rights and welfare, pre-censor the text and pictures before finance would approve the money for publication.

The content had become an issue because Sullivan had included some extraneous material to liven it up. For instance, "there are four things the security police can do to an illegally parked car: issue a warning ticket, issue a $10 parking ticket, tow the car away, or confiscate your first born child."

According to Sullivan, some student senators were afraid that "impressionable freshmen might not realize it was a joke."

Doug Diggle, then student body president, gave a harsher interpretation to Sullivan's flippancy

Temkin said he had written a background story on the handbook but that handbook co-editors Sullivan and Coonen asked him not to print the story because it wasn't a sure thing that the handbook would be printed. Sullivan denied he ever asked Temkin not to print the story.

Coonen substantiated Temkin's account. "It was still conditional as to whether the handbook would ever be printed, and there was no need to report on it at that time," she said. After the type was set and layout for the handbook were completed, Sullivan went back before the senate and requested $800 to cover printing costs. By that time it was late December. The bill was passed unanimously.

The Daily Egyptian did not report the funding of the handbook.

Temkin said that there were many other stories he was covering concerning student government, and that the slow progress of the legal rights handbook had convinced him that it was a low priority story. What happened next is still something of a mystery.

Standard procedure for bills involving student government money is for the president to sign or veto the bill within seven days. A cover letter is then sent to the Office of Student Life, which issues a voucher authorizing the expenditure.

In the case of the legal rights handbook, no cover letter was ever written.

Diggle said he signed the bill the same day it was passed and that it must have been an office mistake that was responsible.

Spenner also blamed the delay on an error by the student government office secretaries, but shouldered some of the blame for his own negligence in not following up on the progress of the paperwork.

Coonen, too, blamed the error on "general office confusion."

Sullivan, however, believes that Diggle was responsible for the delay. Even if Diggle didn't actively oppose the handbook, said Sullivan, "He didn't lift a finger to help it along."

Sullivan also blamed the Daily Egyptian. "If the Daily Egyptian had done their job, student government would have stayed on the ball."

Diggle, however, blamed the sponsor of the bill, Dennis Sullivan, for the problem. "Dennis never came up to talk to us. If he had, we

After three months, Sullivan got together with Diggle and Dean of Student Life Harvey Welch. The error was discovered, a cover letter was written and the money to cover printing costs got to the Daily Egyptian the same day.

But that wasn't the end of the problems for the handbook. It took a month for the paper stock to arrive at the Daily Egyptian, and another two weeks before they were printed.

Development director sought

An innovative fund raiser for SIU is being sought for the new position of director of development. George Mace, vice president for university relations, said Thursday.

Advertising of the position will begin immediately with hopes of filling the job by September.

According to Mace the main goals for the new director include:

- Developing new fund-raising programs.

- Working to attract industry to Southern Illinois.

- Attracting new endowed academic chairs.

- Coordinating alumni and SIU foundation efforts.

- Making the foundation self-supporting.

Mace said the new director should "contribute to creating programs to be of mutual benefit to the University and the area."

Some ways to accomplish this, Mace said, would be for the director to help place student workers in jobs in area industry and to work with area chambers of commerce and Southern Illinois Inc., seeking new industry for the area.

The new director will be expected to attract another endowed chair within three years, then add another every three years which, Mace described as a "great need."

An endowed chair is a faculty position created and funded by private sources.

SIU-C has only one endowed chair, the Vandever Chair of Economics, filled since 1960 by C. Addison Hickman.

It is funded through an endowment from W.W. Vandever, a 1909 SIU-C alumnus and former oil company president.

The SIU-C Foundation raised $197,000 in cash last year and so far this year has raised $250,000, Mace said. He expects an increase in cash raised 30 to 35 per cent over last year.

"The immediate goal is not going to be dramatic in terms of multiple increase of funds," said Mace, although he expects the new director to attract about $1.5 million in his first three years on the job.

No committee will be involved in finding candidates, said Mace who will select the new director.

SIU-C has only had one development director in the past. Cyrus Simic was hired for the job in February 1974 and was paid $27,000 a year but left seven months later to take the same post for the Yale University Medical Center.

HOBBLING FAMILY

BUFFALO, N.Y. (AP)—Most people could find one bad break more than enough. The Ross family had two.

Frances Ross, 24, fell in her icy driveway and broke her left ankle. Two hours later, her brother, Andy, 13, fell off a sled in the same area and broke his right ankle.

Foreign scholars helped with problems

SIU's welcome mat for foreign students stretches across thousands of miles and continues until the student is living in Carbondale and ready to start classes.

Approximately 500 students from about 70 countries are enrolled at SIU. Ronald E. Thomas, director of foreign admissions said in an interview, Thursday.

Orientalization for these students begins after they have been formally admitted to SIU. These students are sent a "Welcome Newsletter" from the International Student Council, chairman and organization president, Thomas said. "We want to let them know they have friends here."

Last year an out-of-country orientation program was organized by Arthur Casebeer, associate professor of higher education and Thomas to acquaint foreign students with SIU before coming to the U.S.

Thomas said student-orientation leaders were given pamphlets and slides about SIU before they went to their home country for the summer. The leaders contacted new students while they were home and gave orientation programs on the housing, social life, academic requirements, finances and course of study at SIU.

Although the program was the first of its kind in the country, it will not be used again this year, Thomas said. The program, which was funded by the National Association for Foreign Student Affairs, will end on June 30 and plans have not been made yet to apply for another grant.

Next fall the foreign admissions office plans to send out a "what you do next" type of brochure, Thomas said.

"We learned from the Out-of-Country Orientation Program that students want to know about the faculty as well as the school," Thomas said. The students will be sent a detailed description of their department, information about their teachers and the course outlines.

The brochure will also include a breakdown of university life, Thomas said.

When the foreign student arrives on campus the International Education Office takes over.

Jared Dorn, assistant director of international education, said the main problem foreign students face is housing.

Most foreign students arrive on campus late and University housing is usually filled, Dorn said. Another problem is that the majority of foreign students are older graduate students and don't want to live on campus.

A week before classes start an orientation week is scheduled by the international education office. During this week the students are given temporary housing in the Baptist Student Center if they have not already found housing, Dorn said.

The purpose of the orientation week is to acquaint the student with the campus and town, Dorn said. "We don't want to swamp them with too many facts or details."

Representatives from the town and the various foreign student associations talk to the students about the school, health services, traffic laws, where to shop and the type of clothing they might need, Thomas said. "We also try to solve any personal problems the student might have."

Most of the foreign students that come to SIU are able to adjust to the change in culture, Dorn said. "Most students are older and have thought pretty much about what they are doing, and they know what they want."

According to Thomas a higher percentage of foreign students get their degrees than American students. The reason for this, Thomas said, is that it takes a lot of financial and academic effort for a foreign student to attend school in the U.S. and they know "an American degree is more prestigious."

Center to host rummage sale

An annual rummage sale sponsored by the Women's Center in Carbondale, will be held all day Saturday in the basement of the First Presbyterian Church.

Donations for the sale should be taken to the church located at 310 S. University no later than Friday evening.

Any donations will be accepted, but should be in "usable condition," said Marcy Darchik, program coordinator for the Women's Center. The rummage sale will feature housewares, plants, books and clothing. Persons interested in helping with the sale should sign up at the Women's Center, located at 408 W. Freeman St.

Funds from the sale will be used for Women's Center activities which include a rape action program, emergency shelter for women, and various weekly programs.

Darchik said the sale has been a success in the past and welcomes all to attend.

Local officers form new association

All twenty officers of the Jackson County Sheriff's Office have decided unanimously to form the Jackson County Sheriff's Association. The purpose of the group is to unite "in an effort to promote recognition of law enforcement personnel on the county level."

Deputy Sheriff William Mehrtens said the association, which was organized Wednesday, consists of all those who fall under the guidelines of the Jackson County Merit Board, the board that hires and fires and sets wages.

Officers in the association include deputy sheriffs, chief deputy sheriffs and deputy sheriff jail officers.

Mehrtens said the sheriff's office is a very transient department and, "lot of good men have left because they just can't make enough money." He said he hopes the association will cure this although it is not the primary purpose of the association.

Mace releases final athletic director list

By Scott Burnside
Daily Egyptian Sports Writer

Five finalists for the SIU athletic director post were named Thursday by George Mace, vice-president for university relations.

The only local name on the list was Paul Lambert, Saluki head basketball coach.

The other finalists are: Gale Sayers, director of fund raising, University of Kansas; Bill Belknap, associate director of athletics, University of Arizona; Leo E. Cahill, former general manager of the Memphis Southmen, and Dale W. Foster, niversity of Dayton athletic director.

All the finalists will be brought to campus beginning the first week in July. A final decision won't be made until the end of August.

Two of the prospective directors, Sayers and Cahill, come from professional football.

Sayers, years on the Chicago Bears football team are well known. As a rookie in 1965 Sayers totaled 132 points to set a record for a first year player. That year he also set a one year record for touchdowns.

Rookie Sayers scored six touchdowns in a single game against the San Francisco 49ers. Sayers shares that record with two other players.

Sayers' current job at Kansas is director of the Williams Educational Fund. He was a member of the Chicago Park District Board and director of Mayor Daley's Reach Out Program.

Cahill's professional experience is in the administrative end of football. The former manager of the Memphis Southmen was also the former acting vice president of the World Football League.

As a coach, Cahill was the mentor of the Toronto Argonauts of the Canadian Football League from 1967 to 1972.

Despite the presence of two professional sports people on the final list, Mace said that it wasn't any conscious effort of the committee to search for a professional sports personality.

"It's just happenstance and may be good happenstance. I didn't tell the committee to look for a professional sports background, but it can be very valuable," Mace said.

"Hey, you can also say there are two people with a University of Illinois background on the list," Mace pointed out, referring to Foster and Cahill. Both men graduated from Illinois.

Foster, prior to his Dayton athletic director job, was the assistant athletic director at the University of Arizona from 1969 to 1974.

The other half of the University of Arizona connection is Belknap. He has been assistant athletic director at that school since 1974. Belknap graduated from West Point Military Academy. A former track and football coach, he is also an assistant professor of health, physical education and recreation at Arizona.

The only local person on the list of finalists, Lambert, has already cleared one obstacle on his way to the director post.

At the beginning of the athletic director search, Mace made it clear he didn't want a person in the job who was also head sports coach.

Southern's last athletic director, Doug Weaver, was at one time, both the director and the head football coach. Before Weaver left to move to the athletic director post at Georgia Tech, he had to give up the football position.

Mace said Lambert's name on the list didn't mean he was going back on his philosophy.

"No, what it means is that Coach Lambert has agreed not to be the basketball coach if he gets the job. Each of those posts are full-time jobs," Mace said.

Lambert said he was aware of that understanding.

"I think when they did the job description there was a great deal of sentiment that it was too big of a job for a man with two positions," Lambert said.

Lambert said he really didn't want to leave basketball, but it was time for him to decide which way he wanted to go in his life.

"I believe that because I've been here awhile that I might have more insight towards our problems than someone from the outside."

Lambert came to Southern in 1970 as the head basketball coach. Last year the Salukis finished second in the Missouri Valley Conference, their first year in the league.

Before SIU, Lambert was the athletic director and head basketball coach at Hardin-Simmons University in Texas from 1967 to 1970.

Because of his experience here, Lambert said that he had several feelings about Southern's program, which might be better expressed on an administrative level.

Lambert said a director with a full-time coaching position would need a strong coaching staff in order to do both jobs correctly.

"I think in our situation it's different, because the program is so diverse. It would be very difficult to have both jobs," Lambert said.

Star's son attends camp

POMPANO BEACH, Fla. (AP) — "A lot of people are expecting a lot of things out of me. But no one's expecting more out of me than I am," says Joey Banks, the 17-year-old son of former Chicago Cubs star Ernie Banks.

The teen-ager, who has been playing baseball since he was seven years old and is a member of a high school team in Scottsboro, Ariz., is attending a baseball school and camp in this South Florida city.

"I've still got a lot to learn, that's why I'm here," said the young shortstop. "Since I started young it's primarily instinct. But here we learn fine points, like sliding techniques and where to play the batters."

Although his father belted 512 home runs before ending his playing career four years ago, Joey said he feels no extra pressure as he tries to acquire the skills to become a major leaguer.

"I just play," he said. "I really do. I've found no problems being Ernie Banks' son."

Larry Hoskin, an instructor at the camp, said he's impressed by more than Joey's talent.

"He listens an awful lot, really wants to learn," Hoskin said. "I might have thought someone in his position would have a know-it-all attitude, but he's fit right in."

Ernie Banks said he's pleased that his son is seeking a baseball career.

"You know, Joey would ask lots of questions, and I'd be thrilled to answer them," Banks said from his Chicago home. "But I never tried to push him. The decision on a career was his, though I'd give all the help I possibly could."

NCAA changes finals bracket for basketball

ITASCA, Ill. (AP) — The NCAA Division I basketball committee voted Thursday to retain its 32-team championship bracket, but took steps to insure two top teams don't meet head-on in the first round.

There had been some discussion the NCAA would revise its current playoff procedures when last year it appeared No. 1 ranked Indiana and No. 2 ranked Marquette could have met each other in first round sectional play.

But the committee voted instead to give itself authority to seed teams "in the best interests of the tournament," an NCAA spokesman said. This would make certain, he said, that top teams do not face each other in the first round.

The committee also designated Philadelphia the site of its 1981 championship playoff and selected the first round and regional sites for the 1978 playoffs.

In the East era region, first round sites are Philadelphia and Charlotte; Midwest, Purdue and Tennessee; Midwest, Oral Roberts and Wichita; West, Oregon and Arizona State.

Regional sites for 1978 are Providence in the East; Dayton in the Midwest; Kansas in the Midwest; and New Mexico in the West.

Men's intramural department plans thirteen athletic summer competitions

By Steve Stefanik
Student Writer

Students may have thought they've seen the last of spring semesters professors'. Well, maybe not.

You might have to face him on the mound, force him out at second, or attempt to catch one of his towering fly balls.

Whatever the situation may be, men's 12 and 16-inch softball starts the list of 13 athletic events for this summer, any member of the student body, faculty, or staff is eligible.

According to Larry Schaake, coordinator of recreation and intramurals, the summer program focuses on the sports events as being more recreational in nature. "By having faculty, staff, and students compete together in intramural sports, this enables a sporting event to be more sociable and less competitive," Schaake said.

Any male student, faculty, or staff interested in entering a 12 or 16-inch slowpitch softball team during the summer session, must have their signature on the team roster by Tuesday to be eligible.

The athletic events scheduled for the summer session begin on the following dates: 12 and 16-inch softball (slow pich), June 28; golf tournament, July 7; tennis (singles, doubles, mixed doubles), July 13; racquetball (singles, doubles, mixed doubles), July 13; handball (singles, doubles), July 27; and canoe racing, July 31.

Aside from the intramural sporting events that have been scheduled for the summer, the men's Office of Recreation and Intramurals administer three other programs: sports-recreation clubs, wheelchair athletics, and informal recreation. The summer months are when an individual can best take advantage of informal recreation.
